GIVING THANKS AND RELIGIOUS HOLIDAYS

Curt B. Witcher

The end of October heralds the beginning of the season of celebrations for many. Harvesting across the country has been in full gear for many weeks, and talk of Thanksgiving festivities is already filling many households. As citizens of this great country, there is certainly much for which we all can be thankful--and as genealogists engaged in the wonderfully enriching activity of discovering our ancestry and heritage, we are doubly blessed. As you begin your Thanksgiving plans, remember what a great time of year it is to record family stories. It is also an excellent time to update your photograph albums with new family shots. And it is certainly an excellent time to solicit as many eyes and minds as possible in identifying some of those nameless photographs.

In these last sixty-one days of the year, nearly every religious tradition celebrates some holiday or feast day. What a perfect opportunity for all of us to see when the last history of our church, meeting-house, mosque, synagogue, or temple was written. If it has been a while (or never!), why not get a group of interested individuals together and commit to compiling an early twenty-first century history? In the process of doing such compilations, it is amazing the number of records that are uncovered, both official records of the religious entities and the letters, diaries, and daybooks of the leaders. Such endeavors also typically uncovered some wonderfully unique photographs. Researching and recording these histories helps ensure the information is available for future generations of genealogists and historians.

And of course, the Historical Genealogy Department would be interested in receiving a copy of any work that might be compiled, whether published or not. Our library also provides nice homes for older church histories, yearbooks, and directories that folks may not have a need for anymore. Please do keep us in mind.

A couple of news items:

- +The department Surname File on the "Friends of Allen County" website <www.FriendsOfAllenCounty> has been updated recently.
- +Two mortality list databases have been added, one for the Indiana Farm Colony for the Feeble-Minded and one for the Fort Wayne State School.
- +The number of Allen County, Indiana church burial databases has doubled from five to ten.
- +On October 1st, the library introduced a brand new email reference service called "Ask a Librarian." A part of this new service is an "Ask a Genealogy Librarian" feature. While the service is not designed for conducting individual research, it is a way for you to gain knowledge about what we have in our collection and get some suggestions on a genealogical research problem that might have you stumped. Simply send an email to <Genealogy@ACPL.Info>.

CITY DIRECTORIES & PHONEFICHE

Elaine M. Kuhn

Looking for an ancestor in between censuses? Trying to track down an old classmate? Some very useful tools when searching for friends and relatives are city directories and telephone books. City directory listings include the head of each household along with the spouse's name, the person's address, their place of employment (if any), and often some mention of whether the person owns, boards, or rents at that address. More recent directories list telephone numbers and how many years a person has resided at their address. Some directories are called "criss-cross" directories, meaning that one looks for an individual by their address and/or telephone number, rather than by their name. Telephone books provide similar information to city directories such as the name and address of the resident, but they do not list a resident's employer.

The Historical Genealogy Department holds a vast collection of city directories in various formats. City directories from some 240 American cities covering the years 1785 to 1860 are available on microfiche while directories from over 100 American cities covering the years 1861 to 1935 are available on microfilm. As the department is a repository for R.L. Polk directories, we also have over 45,000 print directories for U.S. cities ranging from 1964 to the present. The department also holds directories from various Canadian localities, primarily from the mid to late twentieth century.

To determine which areas the department holds print directories for, use the library's online catalog at www.acpl.lib.in.us and search by the name of the city or county you are interested in. Currently the department's microfilm and microfiche holdings are not part of the online catalog, but they are searchable in the Microtext section's card catalog.

A little-known source that might help researchers tracking relatives in the late twentieth century is Phonefiche. Phonefiche is a collection of microfiche copies of telephone books for hundreds of U.S. cities. Phonefiche is an excellent resource to employ for cities that no longer publish annual directories or to fill in the gaps for years where city directories are not available. ACPL's collection covers the years 1978-1990, and is arranged alphabetically by city. There is a Community Cross-Reference Guide (ACPL call no. 973 P5665) shelved in the Microtext section of the department for determining which smaller towns are included in larger city telephone books.

CONFEDERATE PENSION APPLICATION SOURCES AVAILABLE IN THE HISTORICAL GENEALOGY COLLECTION, PART 1

By Delia Cothrun Bourne

At the end of the Civil War, the Federal government provided pensions to Union soldiers who were disabled, or to widows and dependent parents of those who had died. Later, the government provided pensions to all Union veterans or widows. Confederate veterans were not eligible for Federal pensions because they had fought for another country, the Confederate States of America (CSA), which no longer existed. In the decades following the war, the various state governments of the former CSA stepped in to provide pensions for those who had served their states by serving the Confederacy. Of course, no state outside of the Southern states provided pensions for Confederate veterans.

Through a mutual agreement of reciprocity among the states, pensions were granted from the state of current residence rather than the state of service. Most states had regulations that linked length of residence to eligibility. Applications for the veterans could include such information as the veteran's name, current address and length of residence, birth date and place, regiment and company with dates of service, statement or proof of disability or indigency, and information on employment, financial status and dependent children. Widows' applications could include much of the same information, as well as marriage date and place, and death date and place of the veteran. Also included in the applications may be witness or physician statements. Some of these applications may have been indexed. Some of these indexes provide a great deal of information to aid in identifying the veteran; others provide only name and application number. Copies of some states' pension applications, and/or indexes to the pensions are available at the Historical Genealogy Department.

In 1867, Alabama began granting pensions to disabled Confederate, and expanded this to include widows in 1886, and then all indigent veterans or widows in 1891. The applications are listed alphabetically at the Alabama Department of Archives in Montgomery, but are not available in the Historical Genealogy Department of the Allen County Public Library.

Between 1891 and 1939, the state government of Arkansas enacted a number of legislative measures to provide for veterans and widows. The Historical Genealogy Department owns copies of the applications for pensions on 123 rolls of microfilm. Two indexes exist for this set: One is Desmond Walls Allen's "Index to Arkansas Confederate Pension Applications" (ACPL call no. GC 973.74 AR48ALR), which includes name of veteran and widow; company, regiment and division; application date and county from which enrolled; and death dates. The other index is Frances T. Ingmire's "Arkansas Confederate Veterans and Widows Pension Applications" (ACPL call no. GC 973.74 AR48I). The citations in this index include veteran's and widow's names and application numbers; company, regiment and division; dates of service and applications; county of residence; and the death dates of the veterans and widows. Both of these indexes can be found in the Genealogy Department.

HOTEL OF THE MONTH

*****

Each issue we will feature a local hotel, for visitors from out-of-town.

Hilton Fort Wayne at the Grand Wayne Center
1020 South Calhoun Street, Fort Wayne
260 420 1100; fax 260 424 7775

The great advantage of the Hilton is its location — only two blocks from the library. Stroll through the garden behind the Summit Square building and you've arrived! The large hotel, recently renovated, features spacious rooms with pillow-top mattresses. All areas have complimentary wireless high-speed Internet access. There are two restaurants and a bar in the hotel itself, and many fast-food places are a short walk away, as well as the more traditional Bill's Palace. The hotel has an airport shuttle service.
