News for the New Year
by Curt B. Witcher

The New Year often brings new things to our homes and our lives—and it is no different here at the Allen County Public Library. Thanks to the dedicated work of Allen County Genealogical Society volunteers, there are two brand new databases at FriendsOfAllenCounty.org. The first database is an abstraction of the earliest D. O. McComb & Sons funeral home records, 1926 to 1950. It was quite a job to abstract the information from microfiche and accurately key the data for publication. It is so very important to have the early records of this family-owned funeral home as a part of the complement of early twentieth century Allen County, Indiana, record indices available to researchers.

The second database is an 1883 burial list found in and abstracted from the "Fort Wayne Daily Sentinel" by Donald Weber. Though civil birth and death registration was officially required in most Indiana counties beginning in 1882, and a bit earlier in cities like Fort Wayne, researchers are well aware that many individuals in the early decades simply did not get registered. Having burial lists compiled from funeral home records, as this list was, helps genealogists fill-in those early gaps which complement newspaper obituaries and published death notices.

Finally, more than thirty thousand obituaries have been added to the Fort Wayne and Allen County area obituary index. These obituaries represent most of those published in the last quarter of 2005 as well as a very substantial number of obituaries not yet uploaded for the 1988 through 1994 time period.
The department continues to engage in reconnaissance work to ensure that the more than one hundred and fifty years of obituaries for this area are referenced as completely and accurately as possible.

New for the New Year is a "genealogy tee-shirt" being sold by the Friends of the Allen County Public Library. The attractive casual wear sports a bright tree with the slogan "Branchin' Out" and the library's name. The cost is $15 plus Indiana sales tax. If you're looking for that special something for the genealogist in your family, or your genealogist friend, you won't want to miss this unique item. Captured at Sea and in Ports Abroad
by Roberta Ridley

"Registers of Applications for the Release of Impressed Seamen 1793-1802" is among the one-reel wonders of the microfilm collection that may contain a missing piece to your ancestral puzzle.

From the end of the American Revolution until the conclusion of the War of 1812, the U.S. government was concerned with the impressment of seamen on American ships and with their repatriation. American seamen were essentially being kidnapped by the British (and occasionally the French or Spanish) and detained or forced into service in foreign navies. "If the impressment occurred within a foreign port, masters of U.S. ships were to 'make a protest' to the American consul. If the impressment occurred on the high seas, it was to be reported to the collector of customs at the first U.S. port at which the vessel arrived." The vessel master's protest stated the name, place of residence and citizenship of the person impressed or detained, the manner of the impressment, and by whom it was made. An account of these impressments or detentions was to be submitted to the Secretary of State.

This reel contains four volumes of registers relating to applications for release of impressed seamen and covers an inclusive date span of July 19, 1793 through May 1, 1802. The substantive content varies. Volumes 1, 3, and 4 include an index arranged roughly alphabetically by the first letter of the seaman's surname. Volume 2 is arranged chronologically by date of the application for release. The information provided about each seaman may include: native state, American ship from which he was taken, the British ship on which he was carried off and the name of its captain, date of impressment, evidence of citizenship, and result of the application.
Was a seafaring ancestor really lost at sea, or captured and taken into government service with the British or the French? Continue your missing ancestor search in the single reel on impressed seamen. (Microcopy # M-2025 Roll 1)

The Belfast Newsletter and Index 1737-1800
by Steven W. Myers

Most genealogists have looked in an old newspaper to record the valuable information connected with an individual’s marriage notice or obituary. Some have even gone so far as to read through all the local items in a town newspaper covering many decades, in order to glean a wide variety of otherwise unknown details about their ancestral families—illnesses, accidents, house fires, visits by relatives, school awards, membership in local organizations, business advertisements and the prices of everyday household items. This type of search has been made easier for many localities with the advent of computer indexing and the internet. Even our foreign research efforts can benefit.

The Belfast Newsletter is one newspaper that should be of interest to anyone with Scots Irish ancestors living in Northern Ireland in the latter half of the eighteenth century. While only about one quarter of the issues published from 1737-1750 have survived, the run from 1750-1800 is nearly complete. Published three times weekly, the papers are full of local news items that may provide a vital clue in otherwise difficult Irish research. As an example, ship captains occasionally published signed testimonials from satisfied passengers they had already landed in North America, sometimes leaving the only surviving written record of such a passage.

An index to The Belfast Newsletter by John C. Greene, covering 1737-1800, is available here on microfiche and provides access to nearly 300,000 news items and ads. Every significant word and date was indexed. Researchers may check this microfiche index by personal name, place name, subject, and ship name or for advertisements. An online version of this index allows wildcard searching and is available free at www.ucs.louisiana.edu/bnl/ Users are reminded that Irish place names were not yet standardized at that time, and are cautioned to check spelling variations of both personal and place names they are seeking.

Brief abstracts of referenced news items can also be viewed free on the website, but sometimes are a bit cryptic. Fortunately, the Historical Genealogy Department also owns copies of the original newspapers, dating 1737-1800, on 45 reels of microfilm. Visitors may make photocopies of the original text for items they have identified in the indexes, or just enjoy browsing a contemporary Irish newspaper that can help provide historical context for their searches. Those with ancestors from Counties Antrim and Down, or the neighboring region, will find this source fascinating and particularly useful.
Preservation Tip of the Month
by Becky Schipper

ACPL's Preservation Technician Becky Schipper offers advice on conserving your documents:

A method of preserving brittle or acidic documents is to photocopy the item onto acid-free, alkaline-buffered paper. Photocopying will preserve only the contents of the document. If the physical object itself is valuable you may want to encapsulate it in Mylar. Encapsulation is reversible. Encapsulation materials and acid-free, alkaline-buffered paper are available from most suppliers of archival materials.
