Planning is the Key

Curt B. Witcher

April is the harbinger of busier summer times--always an exciting month of research, seminars, and conference activities. And we do all that while still trying to maintain a handle on all the regular daily activities! Add to that the topic-of-the-day for this month--the ever rising gasoline prices with no end in sight, and the crimp those prices are placing on individual and business budgets--and it's no wonder there are days when we feel exhausted before noon!

For genealogists, rising gas prices cause so much consternation because many of the activities we enjoy the most depend on us traveling a bit: attending family reunions, experiencing conferences and seminars in areas where we are researching, making trips to local courthouses and cemeteries, and of course traveling to our favorite genealogical library or research center. If you're like me, the option of not traveling simply is not an option. I believe the key to surviving these times of high energy costs rests in good planning.

If you can't afford to do as many spur-of-the-moment trips, commit to better plan the trips you can take. Plot a course of travel when you do take a genealogical trip (or even business trip!) that may take you to several significant research spots. Organize past research notes, documents, and copies so you have a clearer idea of what your next research steps are--knowing your next research steps should govern your next actual steps.

We know that planning is the key to most successes in one's research. This is just taking planning one step further. If you're going west to attend the National Genealogical Society Conference in Chicago on June 7-10, it's a perfect time to make sure your road to the Windy City goes through Fort Wayne. Plan a day or two before or after the conference to research here at the library. That will save your needing to take a separate research trip.

As gasoline prices consume larger parts of your personal budget, perhaps looking for shorter, more compact genealogical events is an option worth exploring. Cutting four hotel nights down to two will provide the increased resources needed for fuel. There is such a compact, action-filled conference being planned for later this year: "The Keystone to Your Heritage" in Pittsburgh on September 29 and 30. This conference should be an excellent venue for those interested in Pennsylvania research as well as those simply looking to improve their research skills. More information can be found at the following website: <www.pagenealogyconference.com>

As you do your advance trip planning, share that information with members of your local genealogical society and talk about it with family members. Who knows--you may have someone interested in researching with you, and sharing the expenses. We'll get through these challenging times of high energy prices--just plan your work and work your plan!

Indoctrinating the Frontier's Men with Religious Principles: Missionary Society of Connecticut Papers, 1759-1948

Roberta F. Ridley

During the late 1700s, the Congregational Church sought to gain control over religious and political infidelity through religious revivals. A militant and optimistic plan triggered the formation of the Missionary Society of Connecticut in 1798.

The Society's origins were in the General Association, which was organized in 1759 and had sent two missionaries into the "back Settlements" of New York and Vermont in 1774. Ministers feared that without missionaries frontier settlements would be "destitute of public teachers, or fall under the influence of ignorant and evil minded leaders." The missionaries received $4.50 per week and "were instructed to gather Churches, catechize children, ordain ministers, administer Sacraments and discharge all ministerial duties as occasion might require." They also gathered community statistics to assist in future missionary efforts.

Since the Missionary Society of Connecticut was most interested in areas with large numbers of settlers from New England, and especially from Connecticut, their activities focused on Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania and the Western Reserve in Ohio. Society work in other states throughout the upper Midwest is also represented in their papers.

This collection is arranged into two groups, incoming correspondence, 1793-1899, and administrative records, 1759-1948. The incoming correspondence includes letters and reports of missionaries employed by the Society, and of superintendents hired by the American Home Missionary Society with Missionary Society of Connecticut funds.

The letters and diary format reports give a rounded glance into the activities and religious, political and social views of the missionaries. Depending on the locality being served, the reports share insights on working with Native Americans, German or Irish immigrants, health issues, and poverty due to mining tragedies or bad weather. Besides this useful background information, researchers will find mentions of specific frontier births, marriages and deaths recorded no place else. Files for missionaries and superintendents are arranged alphabetically by last name and chronologically by year, month and day.

Administrative records, including manuscript and printed materials, are the second part of this collection. The manuscript materials include various reports from the trustees, annual reports of the Society, and reports of the book committee.

Arizona National Ranch Histories of Living Pioneer Stockman
Delia Cothrun Bourne

In 1977, the Arizona National Livestock Show and the Arizona State Cowbelles formed the Arizona Pioneer Stockmen Association to honor all Arizona residents, age 75 and older, who had been involved in the Arizona livestock industry. In an effort to record and preserve these Pioneers' memories, the ANLS and Cowbelles undertook the task of gathering and publishing the Arizona National Ranch Histories of Living Pioneer Stockman (979.1 AR36ACC). So far, the set consists of twenty-three volumes.

Some of the narratives are short, others close to 50 pages. Some are in third person; others offer a first person perspective; some are single day anecdotes while others cover a lifetime. The few illustrations are on the covers of the original paperbound volumes and are usually photos of the pioneer or his family. Unfortunately, none of these collections are indexed; the tables of contents, which list only the pioneer, leave a great deal to be desired as a finding aid, and locations of the ranches are not always readily discernable. But to the diligent researcher, these volumes provide a wealth of information on the lives and experiences of those in the cattle industry, and to a lesser extent, in Arizona in general. These accounts are not limited to ranching life, but include, for example, activities during World War II, both on the ranch and soldiers' experiences overseas. Even for those not researching a specific family or aspect of life in Arizona in the 19th and 20th Centuries, the volumes hold many entertaining tales.

This set is a wonderful example of a non-historical, non-genealogical society that wishes to preserve the history of its members, and then follows through on those wishes. The Allen County Public Library Historical Genealogy Department is interested in acquiring this type of material, as well as directories and records. Since sponsoring societies like the publishers of the Arizona National Ranch Histories are often unaware of our interest, we may not learn of the publication until it is too late to obtain a copy. If a society to which you belong publishes any type of historical material, or if you know of any in your area, please help us to establish contact so that these extremely useful sources can be added to our collection.

Historic Inscriptions on Western Emigrant Trails
Steven W. Myers

The title of this brief notice is also the title of a fascinating book by Randy Brown that recently arrived in our department. The author spent 25 years collecting thousands of inscriptions carved into rocks and cliffs by pioneers traversing the plains and mountains west of the Mississippi River. Wouldn't it be fun to find a dated inscription left by an ancestor on the trek to California or Oregon? Doing so can be a snap. The book's index includes all of the complete or partially complete names. Not indexed are the many carved initials which might still be profitably explored by checking the geographically oriented chapters that relate to an ancestor's migration trail. The book features interesting descriptions of each site as well as numerous photographs of the many surviving inscriptions. Fortunately, the author has also collected and included previously published inscriptions that are no longer legible. A substantial bibliography of additional sources relating to the western trails rounds out the volume. Dip into this book on your next visit for an absorbing break from your research, whether you find an ancestor or not!

Other books on the journey from the east to California and Oregon can be found by searching in the catalog using the subject heading "Overland Journeys to the Pacific."

Preservation Tip of the Month
Becky Schipper

ACPL's Preservation Technician Becky Schipper offers advice on conserving your documents:

Stable paper can be dry cleaned. This method works for pencil marks and surface dirt. Use a dry cleaning pad or a non-abrasive eraser. Both of these are sold commercially.
