In case you may not have heard, The Genealogy Center and the rest of the Allen County Public Library opened in our new facility this past Saturday! And what a Grand Opening it was! More than two thousand people came through the Genealogy Center in the first five hours we were open.

Library director, Jeff Krull emceed the Grand Opening event, beginning the ceremony with eloquent words about what it took to bring the library and the community to this wonderful new era early in 2007. Library Board President, Jerry Hoemig, reflected on the importance of this twenty-first century library facility for the downtown Fort Wayne area as well as all of Allen County. He recognized various community leaders and officials for their support. Library benefactor, Ted Sloane, spoke about the importance of libraries to education and life-long learning. The keynote speaker was the Chief Justice of the Indiana Supreme Court, Randall T. Shepard. With his congratulations to the library and the Allen County community, the Chief Justice commented on the great importance of libraries to vibrant communities--communities where education, the arts, and cultural appreciation thrive. He contrasted the visionary thinking of those in this institution with the appalling cuts many libraries on the east coast are facing where books that are not among the "hot picks" for a given time period are purged from collections. Then the ribbons to all the departments were severed and the amazement began.

The new Allen County Public Library is really something to see! Indeed, it is a must see for anyone interested in libraries and family history. From the new cafe to the expanded computer labs, from the building-wide wireless connectivity to the amazing amounts of printed materials on browsing shelves, the entire library is warm and inviting. The new Genealogy Center complements the library-wide wireless access with thirty-nine Internet terminals and seven additional "catalog only" computers. An HP Digital Sender 9200C provides genealogists with the opportunity to email scanned page images to their personal accounts—or to other researchers with whom they are collaborating. An array of new ST-200 Digital Imaging Systems provide users of the Center's vast microtext collection with the ability to print images they have selected, save those images to a jump-drive or memory stick, or burn the images to a CD-ROM. And of course, all genealogy and local history materials are on open, browsing shelves for ready access by researchers.

Many more genealogy and family history programs will be offered in our new facility. The state-of-the-art meeting rooms, computer labs, and fixed-seat theater beg to be used for seminars, workshops, institutes, and programs of all kinds. Watch for forthcoming issues of "Genealogy Gems" to learn of these exciting and worthwhile activities. Indeed, there is a February program announcement further on in this newsletter. You really have to come and experience the facility—both now and in August, when we will be hosting that fantastic Federation of Genealogical Societies conference. More news about that is also in this publication.

Genealogical and Biographical Directory to Persons in New Netherland from 1613 to 1674
by John D. Beatty

"New Netherland" is a term used to describe the territory of indistinct boundaries, including parts of New York and New Jersey, held by the Dutch West India Company during the first three quarters of the seventeenth century. Settled principally but not exclusively by Dutch nationals, the area also attracted English, Germans, and Swedes, and remained under the administrative control of the company until the Netherlands ceded it by treaty to England in 1674.

An important tool for researching this heterogeneous group of seventeenth century settlers is David M. Riker's four-volume "Genealogical and Biographical Directory to Persons in New Netherland from 1613 to 1674" (GC 974.7 R449ge). With a purpose similar to that of Robert Charles Anderson's "Great Migration" series for New England, Riker seeks to document every person who settled in New Netherland during this time period, supplying a genealogical summary of husbands and wives, with lists of children and sometimes grandchildren reconstructed from probate and baptismal sources, and significantly, also including the places of origin in Europe when known. He defines the geographical scope of his study as Manhattan and Staten islands, the Hudson River Valley to Albany and Schenectady, the present Bronx and Westchester County, New York, Bergen County, New Jersey, and the western end of Long Island.

Unlike Anderson's work, however, Riker's text consists predominantly of typed family group charts instead of narratives, and he considers his directory to be a work in progress rather than a final, definitive study. In addition, Riker directs readers to information gleaned exclusively from published works that he admits may not always be reliable, rather than also including manuscript sources, which may yield additional and more accurate information.
Sources are abbreviated in the text with a key in the introduction. Arrangement is by surname with additional comment at the beginning about the idiosyncrasies of Dutch naming patterns and the widespread use of patronymic surnames that changed with each generation. Because of the complexity of this region, its sources and customs, this printed set is a useful place for beginning research, but it should not be considered a final, authoritative study.

Kentucky Vital Records
by Delia Cothrun Bourne

The Commonwealth of Kentucky ordered that the recording of vital records commence in 1852, but by 1861, compliance with that mandate had dwindled among the counties. Through the following 50 years, some counties started and stopped keeping records at various times, and even though additional legislation precipitated another start in 1874, by 1879, most counties had stopped keeping records yet again. In 1911, the Commonwealth again began requiring birth and death records. The Genealogy Center has microfilm copies of the early, pre-1911 records, as well as indexes covering 1911 through 1954.

Optimistically entitled “1852-1910 Kentucky Birth, Marriage and Death Records,” this unindexed collection is contained on 31 rolls of microfilm. The material is arranged by county, the record type (birth, marriage, or death), then roughly chronologically within a specific year. Although a few counties have produced indexes in various formats, if a researcher knows the year and county, a search will not take long. In the 1850s, birth records include date, name of child, whether it was born alive or dead, place, father’s or owner’s name, mother’s name, color of child, and residence. Besides the date and place of the event, marriage records give groom’s name, residence, age, indication of the number of the marriage, occupation, and birthplace of him and his parents, with the same information, with the exception of occupation, given for the bride. Later marriage records indicate whether the principals were single or widowed, and record remarks, such as guardian consents. The death records supply date, name, age, gender, marital status, occupation, place of birth, parents or owner, place of death, and residence. Birthplaces of parents and cause of death were added in the 1870s. The listings of places of birth of parents may indicate just the state, but usually a specific county is cited if that state is Kentucky. Also, the place of death is not always the county of record, as in the case of farmer Thomas Taylor, who, according to the Ohio County, Kentucky death records, died in New York City. If the year of an event in your ancestor’s life is not covered by surviving records, remember to seek information on siblings.

“The Index to Kentucky Birth and Death Records 1911-1938,” on 42 rolls of microfilm, is an annual index of both births and deaths, in which the deaths are in bold print. Provided are name, county, date, volume and certificate number, and mother’s maiden name for births. On 39 rolls of microfilm, “The Kentucky Birth and Death Records 1939-1954” separate births from deaths, and, by year, supply name, date, county, mother’s maiden name, and volume and certificate number for births, and the name, date, age, county of event, a county of residence code, and volume and certificate number for deaths.
Countdown to Conference 2007!
by Elaine M. Kuhn

The FGS/ACPL 2007 Conference now has its own website! If you plan to attend the conference, to be held in Fort Wayne, Indiana on August 15th-18th, you'll want to take a look at all the website provides. Visitors to the site can view important information regarding registration, exhibits, special events, lodging, and meetings. Check it out at FGSConference.org.

While you're inspecting the new conference website, remember to take a look at some of the other area websites that might make your conference trip to and visit in Fort Wayne all the more enjoyable. For basic "getting to know us" information, see the Fort Wayne / Allen County Convention & Visitors Bureau website at www.visitfortwayne.com. The Fort Wayne International Airport's website not only provides flight and airline information, it contains ground transportation and hotel shuttle information as well. See their website at www.fwairport.com. And, of course, stay tuned to the Allen County Public Library's website at www.ACPL.Info and check your monthly issues of "Genealogy Gems" for more Genealogy Center news. With the opening of our renovated building at 900 Library Plaza, there will be many, many events taking place that will be of great interest to genealogists and historians, including the FGS/ACPL Conference in August.

Exciting things are happening in the Fort in 2007. Hope you can be a part of them!

February Program--Flickr Presentation
Sharing photos and scanned documents has never been easier, thanks to several new online software programs. One of the most popular of these programs is Flickr, and on Tuesday, February 27th at 2 p.m. at the Main Library in Meeting Room A on the first floor, ACPL Librarian Sara Patalita will present, "Using Flickr to Document Your Genealogy." Sara will discuss the ins and outs of Flickr for storing and documenting your historic photographs.

There is no charge to attend the presentation, but registration is required. Contact the Genealogy Center at (260) 421-1225 or send an email to Genealogy@ACPL.Info to sign up.
