Honoring Our Veterans
by Curt B. Witcher
*************************************************
“Every generation, the possibility . . .” Likely some of you have heard me use that phrase in relationship to the military engagements of this country and the records those engagements have generated. In a few days we will have another opportunity to take at least a few moments to honor our veterans, past and present. I would like to challenge you to “go tangible” this year in honoring our veterans. Truly honor our current veterans and our ancestors who were veterans by really doing something.

For veterans in your family today, take a few minutes to write them a note or a letter, or create a personal memento. In our technology-filled world of email, IM, text messaging, and social networks, hand-written letters or personally crafted mementos mean more than ever. And it certainly demonstrates you cared enough to take some time to do something out of the ordinary--it shows how deeply you care. Mementos can be as simple as taking a copy of an enlistment photograph or other personal document and mounting it on acid free scrapbook paper while “framing” it with red, white, and blue ribbon or sparkles--all things you can find in the scrapbooking section of discount stores, at online scrapbooking sites, and in scrapbooking outlet stores in nearly every community.

For those who do not have a living veteran in their immediate family, certainly you know someone in your neighborhood, at your church, or at work who has a veteran in their family. A note or card of thanks to them would mean more than you might think, as would a freshly baked pumpkin pie at their Thanksgiving dinner table. And the same kind of memento you could craft for a family member also might be crafted for a neighbor or friend’s family member.

For those who may not yet know if they have an ancestor who served in the military but want to do something tangible, you can create a manageable preservation project that may only take an hour or so to do. Such a preservation project could be locating a small to modest-sized local cemetery.
Grab your digital camera and walk through that cemetery taking a digital image of every military tombstone. It might be neat to take along a child or grandchild, pointing out the different wars, ranks, and other tombstone art and markers. It could be one of the most wonderful learning experiences of that young person’s life. And in addition, you will have helped preserve that data for researchers to use.

Finally, as part of a plan to “go tangible,” I am asking that everyone reading this ezine digitize a military document, a photograph of a soldier, or other military artifact in your collection and preserve it for future generations of researchers by sending a digital copy to our Genealogy Center to post on the “Our Military Heritage” website <www.GenealogyCenter.Info/military/>. Since we launched that website in February of this year, more than twenty thousand images have been made available in various formats for researchers to use. We’d like to see that number grow as we strive to provide the maximum amount of free, useful data to assist those doing military history research as a part of their family history projects.

Before you send us the image, practice the “reporter’s trade” of answering the questions of who, what, when, and where. Example: Samuel B. Franklin, service record cards, Civil War, served from New York; or, Arthur Jenkins, photograph, 1944, Fort Benning, GA. Send that descriptive information to us as well. If the image and associated data is less than one megabyte, you can send it to me as an email attachment. If it is a larger file, send me a disk at ACPL Genealogy Center, Box 2270, Fort Wayne, IN, 46801-2270. And if you’ve walked that small to modest-sized cemetery with your child or grandchild, go ahead and send us a CD of the images you’ve captured with permission to post them online. Your entire family will be proud of the tangible effort you’ve made to honor our military—those who are serving now and those who sacrificed before them.

News of the Plains and Rockies by Delia Cothrun Bourne
****************************************************************

There are many misconceptions about how the American West was settled, and the conditions faced by explorers, settlers, Native Americans, and military men and their families. “News of the Plains and Rockies, 1803-1865,” compiled and annotated by David A. White (978 N474), can help dispel some misconceptions and provides first person narratives and modern commentary on a wide variety of experiences encountered by the inhabitants of the early West.

Subtitled “Original narratives of overland travel and adventure selected from the Wagner-Camp and Becker bibliography of Western Americana,” this set of eight volumes, covering the area from the Mississippi River to the west coast, is divided into 26 sections, featuring early explorers, fur hunters, Santa Fe adventurers, settlers, missionaries, Mormons, Indian agents and captives, warriors, scientists, artists, gold seekers, railroad forerunners, and mailmen. Each section begins with a timeline, a perspective to provide historical background on the articles, and a map showing locations of interest. Each article begins with a short paragraph on the significance of the item, and information on the author. Volume 8 also includes a cumulative index by name (often identifying the person by occupation), tribe, locale, subject or ethnic group. For example, in volume 3 there is a mention of Acadians in the background notes to Modeste Demers' account of his 1848 journey from Fort Vancouver to Montreal.

Although the only Fort Wayne mentioned is the one located in Oklahoma, near what is now Watts, volume 3 contains a report by Isaac McCoy, a Baptist missionary to Fort Wayne in its earliest days who worked for many years trying to protect the rights of Native Americans and insure a location for them to settle. In his 1832 report to the Secretary of War, he describes the areas of Oklahoma where some Native Americans had settled, including the problems of getting to the area, as well as how the various tribes were faring. Various emigrant guides in volume 6 detail mileage to each point, and describe crossings, camp sites, and waterways. Volume 7 contains a map of "Key Points for Mailmen, 1851-1865," while in volume 8 Norton Newton Palmer recalls his experiences at a Mormon dance party in Salt Lake City during his 1853 journey from California.

The 168 reports in this set, along with the perspectives and timelines, provide interesting lessons in the history of the American West, and should be examined by all with a research interest in the subject.

Locating Irish Manuscripts in "Hayes"
by John D. Beatty

Many genealogists are well acquainted with the famed Public Record Office fire of 1922 in Dublin, which destroyed many original records for Ireland. In spite of that loss, many archival sources useful to genealogists have survived in repositories around the globe. In an attempt to provide bibliographic access to these important sources, Richard Hayes, director of the National Library of Ireland from 1940 to 1967, edited an 11 volume work titled "Manuscript Sources for the History of Irish Civilisation." Often referred to simply as "Hayes," this index and its supplement reference personal names, subjects, and places associated with archival sources located in 678 libraries and archives in thirty countries, as well as in more than 600 private collections. The work covers manuscripts relating to Ireland and the activities of Irishmen at home and abroad from the fifth through twentieth centuries. The original eleven volumes, consisting of some 310,000 entries, were published in 1965. A three volume supplement appeared in 1979, adding 73,400 more entries. Both sets are available on microfiche in the Genealogy Center.

Hayes divided the work into five sections, with indexes to persons, subjects, places, dates, and manuscripts (by repository). Most genealogists go directly to the name section, where they can search not only for surnames of interest, but also for the names of landlords, whose estate papers may be of genealogical value. For example, under "Grogan" one will find reference to the Grogan family papers, "about 150 documents relating to estate and domestic accounts of the Grogan family of Johnstown, Co. Wexford, 18th-19th c." Researchers should also consider searching by place, looking first for the county and then for the townland, town, or parish. Place names are not always in strict alphabetical order, and names beginning with “Bally-” are often interfiled with those beginning “Bali-” and “Ballin-.” Searching by subject reveals such headings as “rentals,” “wills,” “workhouses,” and “Methodists,” among many others. Each entry lists the repository where the manuscript is located, together with a manuscript or catalog number. From here the researcher will need to contact the relevant repository directly for a copy of the manuscript, or use the reference number in planning a research trip to see it. The “Hayes” index is a useful way to locate obscure and little-known Irish sources and is a “must-see” for any genealogist with an Irish interest.

Preservation Tip of the Month--Tipping-in Loose Pages
by Becky Schipper

Tipping in loose pages requires the following materials.
*PVA Adhesive
*Wax Paper
*Straight Edge
*Exacto Knife

The page to be tipped-in may need to be trimmed to fit back into the book unobtrusively. If there is enough margin it is best to trim the inner edge of the page. Place a small bead of adhesive along the inner edge of the page. Align the page top, bottom, and front edge with the text block. Rub down if needed. Place wax paper on both sides to keep any adhesive from adhering to the pages next to the added one. Place a weight on the book and allow it to dry. Materials needed to do tip-ins are available from library supply catalogs and most craft stores. Try looking at online office, library, and art supply sites as well.

WinterTech 2008-2009
By Melissa Shimkus and Delia Bourne

Another Family History Month is, well, history, but there are still wonderful opportunities to expand your knowledge of family history sources in the upcoming months by attending our WinterTech line-up. Take advantage of these hour-long classes on the second Wednesday of each of the next four months, at 2:30 pm. The series kicks off on November 12, as you learn about "Newspaper Searching with Ancestry's 'Historical Newspapers' and 'Newspaper Archive'" from Delia Bourne. Next, Melissa Shimkus will teach you about "Searching Ancestry.com" on December 10. Cynthia Theusch will offer a "WeRelate.org Overview" on January 14, 2009, and finally, Don Litzer will remind you that online genealogical searching is "Not Just Ancestry" on February 11. Keep track of the dates by checking http://www.acpl.lib.in.us/genealogy/WinterTech.pdf. And remember that these are scheduled to coincide with the Allen County Genealogical Society of Indiana's monthly meetings, held at 7 p.m. on the same dates. Call 260-421-1225 to register for a WinterTech program, or email your registration to Genealogy@ACPL.info. Conserve energy this winter by combining attendance at WinterTech and the ACGSI meetings with research time in the Genealogy Center!
